Dart

The history of DART

Some believe and claim that dart history began when bored soldiers challenge each other by throwing their spears into turned over barrel base, that later evolved into a cut up tree trunk for target.

The rings in the tree trunk turned out to be perfect for keeping scores.

As winter took the game indoors, darts of shorter lengths were used and rules were created and implemented.

In 1898, a "folded-paper" target was patented by an American and the barrel made up of metal was patented in 1906 by an Englishman. By this time, the system of numbering on the dartboard was formulated and accepted.

By the 1900's, the game of darts and its rules was established into what is recognized and accepted today. The board size, the distance of throwing and the darts size was standardized.

All over the world, many people enjoyed playing the simple sport of darts so that teams were organized to play for medals and trophies and professional clubs and associations begun.
